By Michael I. Kautman

MOGADISHU, Somalia, Feb. 8 (NYT).-Somali officials are privately telling Arab and Western diplomats here that their position, in the face of a Soviet and Cuban-sided Ethlopian thrust in the disputed Ogaden, is becom-ing "desperate."

The diplomats, weighing the growing sense of official Somali alarm, are raising questions whose answers they say can be found only in Moscow and Washington. Among the key questions they raise are the following: What are the ultimate Soviet designs in the Horn of Africa? Will the Russians and Cubans restrain an Ethiopian offensive once Ethiopian control has been restored in the Ogaden or will they push on in a punitive attack on Somalia proper? Has the United States received Soviet assurances that Somali territory will not be violated and, if so, can such pledges be believed? And, finally, is there any chance of successful mediation by a committee of the Organization of African Unity, which arrived here Tuesday from Addis

On the last issue, Joseph Garba, tha Nigerian Commissioner of Foreign Affairs who heads the committee, was not enthusiastic on his arrival. "Ethiopia put some very tough pro-posals on the table," he said, "But at least both sides are in a mood to talk to me."

In terms of the pervasive diplomatic speculation, opinions are divided sharply. What the various diplomats were told over the weekend by Somali officials was that in the last two weeks the Ethiopians had launched a serious drive involving MiG jet fighters, Sokhoi bombers, 600 tanks and beavy artillery deployed against key Somali post-tions in the vast Ogaden region. On the strength of Arab intelligence, the Somali officials said assault was preparatory to a twin-pronged major offensive by which the Ethiopians, with Soviet support, intended to slice. through Somalia to the Red Sea. The picture that the diplomats

U.S. Storms a Costly Headache for Airlines

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.-For two days now, passengers have been reclining in seats aboard an American Airlines jumbo jet, with stewardesses bringing them martinis, steak, chicken and crepes and showing them a movie from time to time. Three days of debate on the anti-proliferation measure ended without a serious chailenge from Sen. James McClure, R-Ideho, on behalf of the nuclear onwer industry.

The House passed a similar bill 411 to 9 in September.

White House press secretary Jody Powell today termed the Senate vote "a major step forward for a nonproliferation poli-cy" and promised that President .Carter would sign the measure promptly once differences be-tween Senate and House versions are ironed out.

The legislation would strengthen existing measures to prevent foreign governments or terrorists from diverting peaceful nuclear materials to fabricate weapons. Carter Reported Likely to Back Jet Sale to Egypt

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8 (IHT).—Egyptism President Anwar Sadat had a pre-departure final conference with President Carter today and was expected to be told that Mr. Carter leaned toward a commitment to sell Egypt about 60 F-5E jet-fighter planes.

But a source reportedly said that it would "he a little bit longer" before Mr. Carter's decision would be amounted.

The Egyptian President said, after a meeting with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, that the United States would become more closely involved in the drive for a peace arrangement between issagi and Egypt. "The United States is not an observer or a go-between or a mediator," be said. "No, the mole of the United States now is complete parinership."

Mr. Sadat, in addition to his urgent effort to get the United States to sell Egypt sophisticated weapons, has tried to win U.S. backing for his peace efforts. But his drive for new weapons has been unremitting. However, the Associated Press quoted a key U.S. official as saying that the arms request "is under review and until the President has made up his mind there will be no announcement. Mr. Sadat has linked his desire for potent U.S. arms to his fear Soviet penetration in Africa and its threat to Egypt.

Mr. Sadat reportedly told congressmen yesterday that he wanted more sophisticated planes than the "tenth-rate" F-5E, a lightweight fighter, but it is believed that the Carter administration is unwilling to propose selling Egypt the more potent F-15s and F-16s. It is questionable, moreover, whether Congress would approve sales to Egypt of these planes, which Israel also is seeking.

Even President Certer's expected recommendation to sell Pigypt tine F-5E is likely to worry some legislators who support Israel, sithough Mr. Sadat pledged in his Capitol Hill meet-ings yesterday that he would not use the U.S. weapons against Israel. Mr. Sedet stressed that the Soviet Union has cut off some to his country and urged the Americans not to withhold

However, sending Egypt fighter U.S. practice of selling it only "nonlethal" military equipment, and would probably upset Izraeli leaders. Mr. Sadaty during his six-day visit here, has hlamed Israel for holding up progress in the Egyptian-Israeli peace nego-

The White House, meanwhile, denied today that its release yesterday of a chronology of U.S.-Israel exchanges on the controversial settlements in the West Bank and Sinai had any connection with Mr. Sadat's presence. Israell diplomats said the timing -while Mr. Gadat was sharply criticizing Israel here for establishing the settlements—was unfortunate.

The White House and State Department contend that President Carter had told Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin often that the Jewish settlements in the 1967-occupied territory were illegal and an obstacle to peace. The White House said publication of the chronology was to correct a report yesterday that 13-

Begin Urges U.S. Not Sell Egypt Arms

By John Vinocur

GENEVA, Peb. 8 'NYT'.—Is-raeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said today that acceptance by the United States of President Anwar Sadat's request to supply Egypt with sophisticated arms would heighten the threat of war and have "a very negative effect on the peacemaking process."
"Let me hope that there won't be any such supply." Mr. Begin said at a news conference here. Responding to Mr. Sadat's statements in Washington that Egypt seeks major new U.S. weapons of a type like the F-15 and F-16 jet fighters, Mr. Begin asserted that such a sale would fit into a pattern of Egyptian pressure on Israel.

Negative Development

"But, of course, we cannot submit to any ultimatum," he said, Since these threats are still being issued and if offensive wea-pons are being sold, it will feed that threat and will be a very negative development in the midst of peace negotiations."

Despite his cautioning the Carter administration about interfer-ing with the process "in which the United States is so interest-Mr. Begin avolded attacks on President Sadat and spoke with some optimism about the progress of negotiations.

The Prime Minister, who is visiting Geneva to discuss fund raising and support for Israel with leaders of European Jewish communities, also rejected "assumptions" that continuing development of settlements in occupied territories had eroded support for Israel within U.S. poblic opinion.

"I don't accept that assumption," he said. 'It's a matter of permanent explanation. We do explain our position and there is no reason to assume that the support of public opinion in the United States is diminished for Israel. They have great understanding for us in the United States."

Continuing Negotiations

Mr. Begin based his optimism for a settlement on the continuing negotiations between Egyptian and Israeli defense ministers and what he saw as the possibility of an early resumption of the political talks that were broken oft last month by President Sadat in response to what he called Israeli intransigence.

The Treasury based its 78-page report, titled "Taxation of Americans Working Overseas," on taxreturn data for 1975, which it adjusted for 1977 by figuring in factors for inflation and changes in the tax laws. However, the income figures cited did not include imputed allowances furnished by an employer for housing, education and home leave. These allowances must now be included as part of income under Tax Court rulings in 1978.

150,000 Returns

According to the Treasury figures, there will be approximately 150,000 returns filed by U.S. citizens abroad under Section 911 (Foreign Source Income) in 1977.

These taxpayers, the Treasury reported, tend to have substantially higher income even without special allowances being added in-than domestic taxpayers. According to Treasury figures, 47 per cent of U.S. taxpayers abroad have incomes over $20,000, compared with 14 per cent of domes-

The Treasury reported that the U.S. tax liability for Americans abroad before the 1976 Tax Reform Act was about $185 million. This was increased to about $250 million by 1976 Tax Court decisions involving the "grossing up" of allowances

The reform act more than doubled this liability to about $569 million and, of this increase, taxpayers in OPEC nations, although only 10 per cent of all tapayers filing under Section 911, would bear over 20 per cent. The Treasury said that the cost to the U.S. Treasury in revenue planation.

These figures were much larger than previously estimated, it The report provided a variety of tables comparing the pre-1976 law, the Tax Reform Act and the Ribicoff proposals for various geographical areas and income levels. It emphasized that while its estimates of income, revenue loss and credits for foreign income taxes were not 100 per cent accurate, this did not nullify their usefulness. On foreign tax credits, the report found the "relatively low foreign tax burdens of Americans working abroad striking," adding that "with the exception of Canada (where the foreign tax liability offsets about 80 per cent of the U.S. tax before credits) foreign taxes paid were typically about half the U.S. tax on foreign carned income." The Treasury theorized that "special nonstatutory arrangements" or less vigilance on the part of foreign governments in collecting income taxes might be part of the ex-

In parliament, a member of Prime Minister Menachem Begin's coalition partner, the Democratic Movement for Change, forced the house to criticize obliquely Mr. Begin's handling of nationalist settlers at Shiloh, southeast of Tel Haris.

Shmuel Toledano said that Mr. Begin had caved in under nationalist pressure and had allowed the settlement to go up in Shiloh, "contradictory to Israel's diplomatic needs," a reference to U.S. criticism of the Shiloh situation.

But the DMC managed to force the government to move Mr. Toledano's motion to committee rather than risk a coalition breakup. This in turn prompted hardstruck down, to violate coalition discipline during the stormy session and vote against their own government.

Carter Aides Are Impressed By Sadat's Quiet Diplomacy

By Hedrick Smith

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt may have gained a world reputation for bis highly publicized medis diplomacy, but he seems to be making the most headway this week with the quiet diplomacy in his private courting of President Carter and influential members of Congress.

If the first outward signs are any indication, it appears that during the long weekend at Camp David, Md., Mr. Sadat may have been more persuasive with Mr. Carter than vice versa.

Any promises that may have teen made are still private, but administration policymakers do not keep it secret that Mr. Sadat bas strengthened their sympathy for his predicament and reinforced their inclination to believe that Israel's leaders face the toughest decisions in the weeks ahead. "We are convinced be's not posturing," said a presidential "He's dead serious."

If the administration thought it was going to persuade Mr. Sadat to temper his rhetoric or to shift his negotiating positions, his tough restatement of the Egyptian stance at the National Press Club Monday and bis personal criticisms of Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel must have dimmed these hopes Indeed, he seems to have hardened his stance on the Patestinian issue, presumably a negotiating tactic.

For his part, Mr. Sadat could take comfort yesterday in witnessing Washington engage in yet another outburst of the running argument with Tel Aviv over what promises were made by the Israelis on new settlements in the occupied West Bank and the Si-

UN Study Calls Marijuana 'Far From Harmless

GENEVA. Feb. 8 (IHT) .- Marijuana is "far from being a harm-less substance, either for the individual or for society," the International Narcotics Control Board sald vesterday.

This warning accompanied the finding in the board's annual report that the misuse of meriuane, one of the names given to the drug known scientifically as cannable, is "massive and may still be increasing."

The board is the watchdog unit for the international treaties that seek to prevent diversion of drugs into illicit channels. Its 13 members are elected by the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

The 1961 Convention on Nar-

While governments also re-main obligated to ban the nonmedical use of marijuana, the board said this does not neces-sarily mean that consumers must be treated as criminals. On the misuse of narcotics generally, the board said that the amount of drugs of all kinds moving in illicit channels has shown no signs of decreasing.

LONDON, Feb. 8 (AP)-A new and smaller £1 bill went into circulation in Britain today. It is 60 per cent the size of a dollar. The Bank of England said that it hoped to replace the 800 million old ones by next year.

The government said the naw size would reduce the cost of printing and help the blind distinguish the £1 note from larger denominations. The new bill is 18 per cent smaller than the old one. The value of the pound has dropped 19.6 per cent since 1975. It was worth $2.40 then; now it is $1.93.

'Manifesto' Slipped to Der Spiegel

E. German Dissidence Reported

By Michael Getler

BERLIN (WP) .- Barly in January, the few shops in the Communist half of this divided city where residents can buy tape-recorder cassettes were all

One reason suggested by some East Germans is that on Jan 2 and 9, an allied radio station across the dividing wall in West Berlin broatleast, as it had previously announced that it would, the lengthy text of a sharply critical "manifesto" that allegedly was produced by an opposition movement within the Communist party and slipped to the West German magazine Der. Spiegel for publication

In this view, the manifesto can now be secretly distributed via the cassettes and pondered privately by East Germans, much as copies of a manuscript of a recent and similarly critical book by an East German economist, who is now under arrest, are said to be circulating here. There may be other explanations for the disappearance of cassettes from the shelves. Christmas buying or perhaps recording of a rock concert broadcast by the same jointly operated U.S.-West German Radio in the American Sector, as the station is called.

But the manifesto continues to tension and uneastness beneath the outwardly calm East German surface.

Call for Tighter Control The Communist party chief, Erich Honecker, yesterday called closer cooperation between Fast German and Soviet secret police in the struggle against the enemies of peace and socialism." In a message marking the 28th anniversary of the East German Ministry for State Security (MFS)—the East German equiv-alent of the Soviet KGB—Mr. Honecker said reactionaries, militarists and revenge-seekers were trying to sabotage détente. Premier Willi Stoph, generally ranked as No. 2 behind Mr. Honecker, has not been seen publicly here since about Jan. 16. He did not show up on Monday to greet the visiting Angolan Premier.

There is speculation that Mr. Stoph had been called to Moscow for a while. Ordinarily, an absence from public view for a few weeks might not be important. But the situation has taken on considerable interest in many quarters here because Mr. Stoph is one of the few too-ranking party members who was not singled out for sharp personal criticism in the manifesto.

The idea that there might be a group of dissidents within the East German Communist party, or that Mr. Honecker may be losing his grip, could be making Moscow nervous about the political stability of a country that, officially at least, is its most devoted ally.

The East German party newspaper, Neues Deutschland, has recently published—perhaps as a several items relating to the Soviet Army units stationed in East Germany-about 409.-000 troops in 22 divisions.

Names Kept Secret

Aside from a sharp attack on the East German form of Communism, the manifesto contained charges of personal corruption and nepotism against Mr. Honecker and other officials and a strong attack against the Soviet Union as well.

The editors of Der Spiegel claim that the manifesto was and high-level officials within the roling Socialist Unity party in East Berlin. But they refuse to disclose the names for fear the

Russia Thought to Launch A-Fueled Warship

By Bernard Weinraub

WASHINGTON, Peb. 8 (NYT). -The highest-ranking officer in the Navy said yesterday that the Soviet Union apparantly has mened its first nuclear-power-

Appearing before the House Armed Services Committee, Adm. James Holloway, chief of navai operations, said that he "could not rule out the possibility" that the Russians had recently de-ployed a 20,000-ton, nuclear-powered warship. It could be a cruiser, he indicated. It would be the Russians' first nuclearpowered warship, although they have already built nuclear-powered icebreakers. The disclosure indicated that the Goviet Navy may eventually reduce its dependence on support ships, because nuclear-powered vessels can travel greater dis-tences than conventionally powcraft. This development would enable the Russians to deploy a sizable number of ships in an area for a lengthy period.

Fueling Debate Adm. Holloway's comments were viewed as fueling the debate over whether the U.S. Navy's chips should be nuclear-nowered or conventionally powersd, a far chesper option. Some in the Navy's hierarchy, including the politically powerful Adm. Hyman Rickover, have consistently sought moleur-powered warships in the ongoing debate about the service's future role and the types of ships it needs.

Other Problems

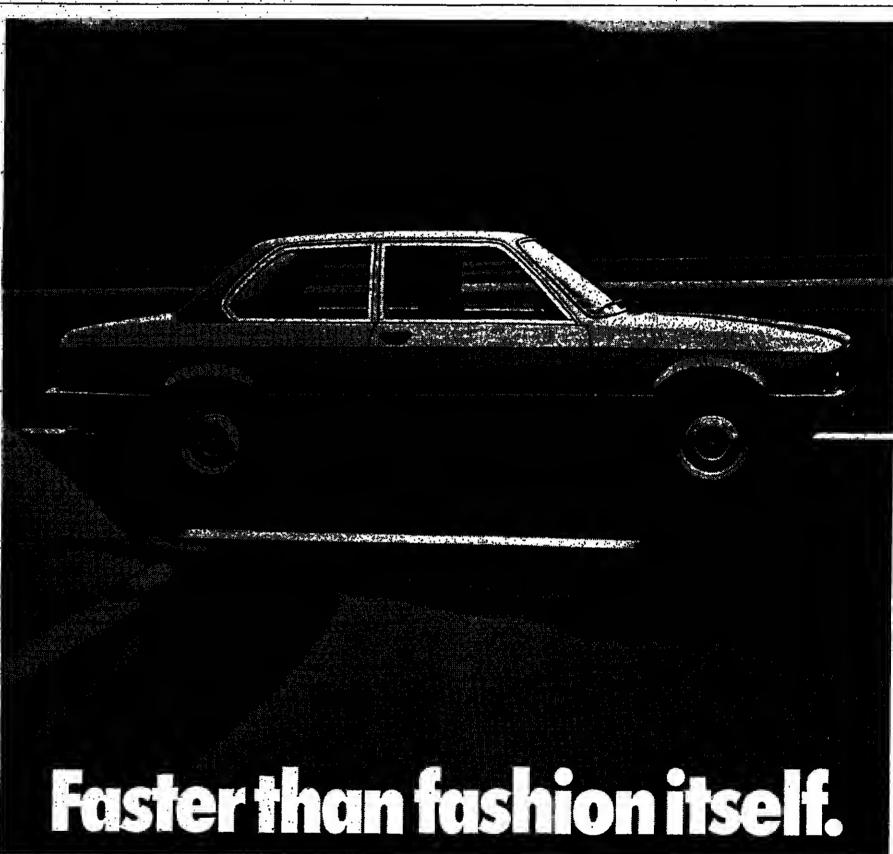

But costs are only part of the problem. Monday, after Connecticut Gov. Ella Grasso banned all but essential vehicles in Hartford, the manager of a big American Airlines reservation facility there won an exemption. He harriedly called the city's radio and TV stations and per-suaded them to broadcast that American employees would be allowed to drive to work. Once there, the emergency crew ate hamburgers made by a local sales representative. United canceled about 15 per cent of its flights Monday, but an operations executive said that this storm would not cost the carrier as much as the huge Midwestern blizzard on Jan. 26. The reason, he said, was betither forecasting. "We had five hours' advance warning," he said, "which allowed us to cancel early. That saved astronomical costs of hotel rooms for passengers who make it only halfway."

Monday, United called off more than one fifth of its operations. "It can take us 12 to 14 hours to get back to normal after a field is open," the executive said. "Access roads are impassable, food service is limited and ground equipment does not function properly. It's a lot of headaches." At closed airports, United was using only skeleton crews, many of whom were working 30 to 35 hours straight. D Los Angeles Times ...

Once again we've anticipated the future.

Few people these days buy large cars as a matter of prestige. Even in the luxury class; size has ceased to be an important factor and the decision to buy is based on more rational principles. In the future, the trend will be towards cars which combine mechanical sophistication and high quality finish with relatively compact dimensions.

We at BMW already anticipated that future. The BMW concept of a high performance luxury car has been embodied in the most compact possible form. To do this, we have incorporated the unique running characteristics of our big in-line six cylinder engines in economical power units of 2 and 2.3 litres. These new BMW sixes offer all the comfort which comes from higher performance, while their turbine-smooth running provides a level of refinement which is unusual in cars of this size and capacity.

The BMW 320 and 323i supply all that is required of a luxury motor car in the most compact possible form. They are built for drivers who think of understatement as a virtue rather than a vice.

Business Soars, Fears Don't At 'Satellite City' in Canada

YELLOWKNIFE, Canada, Feb. 8.—Business has been booming lately for the Tundra Silkscreen Co. here. Its hottest selling item is a $7 T-shirt decorated with a picture of a plummeting Soviet spy satellite and the words, "What me worry?"

Borrowed from America's Mad magazine, the motto accurately captures the mood in this center of gold mining and government in Canada's Northwest Territories. Soviet Soldiers Rebuffed in Berlin

BERLIN, Feb. 8 (AP) -Six Russian soldiers were turned away from the back entrance of an Allied building today in the latest reported incident, involving Soviet patrols in West Berlin.

The six Russians tried to enter the rear door of the Allied Command building in suburban Dah-lem, a building used for meetings among the Allied powers, which still theoretically occupy Berlin, a spokesman for the three Westcrn powers said.

German guards wearing uniforms similar to those of the U.S. Army, a common system outside tor of West Berlin, told the Russians that they could enter only through the front door, the spokesman said. He said the Russians got into a vehicle and

As headquarters for Canada's northern military command, Yellowknife is also a center of search-and-rescue missions for pilots downed on the trackless tundra. The armed forces sometimes rely on civilian voluntees to fly as spotters abourd the C-130 Hercules search planes. So it's perhaps understandable that planes out scouring the tundra for satellite debris have not stirred great excitement.

More comment has been aroused by platoons of foreign jour-nalists trooping through town, especially the free-spending crews of U.S. television networks who may have done as much for the local economy as a week of pipe-line construction.

Network employees chartered and commandeered taxis as chauffeured limousines. One driver recruited by a U.S. network managed in one day to run up a fare of $180.

U.S. Unveils School-Aid Plan For Middle-Income Families

veiled a $1.2-billion program designed to provide aid to college students from middle-income families to offset the high cost of tuition.

The aid would include grants of $250 to students from families with incomes between $15,000 and $35,000, and subsidized loans for students from families with gross income up to $47,000.

The program is an attempt to undercut a push in Congress for a tax credit to parents of all college students, a plan the administration opposes Mr. Carter and Health, Educa-

The administration also will seek an extra $327 million over the $540 million appropriated for the Guaranteed Student Loan Program this year, with the gov-ernment subsidizing the interest on 260,000 new loans to students from families with incomes of $16,000 to $47,000.

HOUSTON, Feb. 8 (AP).—A federal court jury found three former Houston policemen guilty today on two counts of violating the civil rights of a Mexican-American who drowned last year while in their custody.

One of the counts is punishable by life in prison, the other by one year in jail and a $1,000 fine. The jury of seven men and five women was in its third day of deliberations after a trial conducted by U.S. District Judge Ross Defendants Terry W. Densor 27, Stephen Orlando, 22, and Joseph Janish, 22, were accused of violating the rights of Jose Campos Torres, 23, a laborer.

Denson was accused of pushing Torres off a 16-foot-high wall into a hayou after he and other officers slapped and kicked the Mexican-American at an isolated area near police headquarters.

Denson had claimed Torres wa not pushed, but either fell or jumped into the bayou.

Mr. Torres's body was found in Buffalo Bayou, a dirty, sluggish stream that flows through a section of downtown Houston, on a sunny Sunday in May, three days after he was arrested during a disturbance at a tavern.

It was the second trial for on and Orlando. A state court jury rejected a murder com-plaint against them last year and found them guilty of negligent homicide, a misdemeanor. The jury set the penalty at probamary one-year sentences.

Progress-1 was launched Jan. 20, carrying supplies and equip-ment. It automatically docked with Salyut-6 two days later and cosmonauts Yuri Romanenko and Georgy Grechko spent the next 15 days unloading the capsule and carrying out the dan-gerous task of refueling the Salyut-6 in outer space.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Feb. 8 (AP).—Scientists at the University of Michigan said this week they had cut short their experiments using beboons in simulated auto crashes after the death of one of the baboons.

Scientists Decide That's Enough

. A university spokesman said that when the baboon was killed Friday, studies of its injuries gave scientists enough information to avoid the sacrifice of any more. .The research, at the university's Highway Safety Research Institute, is part of a government-funded project to develop better seat belts and other restraint systems in automobiles.

Plans for the tests had drawn criticism from humane society groups, who called them unnecessary and a waste of life.
"Isn't that a beautiful victory?" exclaimed the Rev. Erwin Gaede, a Unitarian minister who was one of the protesters, on hearing the news that further tests had been canceled. He said he was certain that publicity about the tests killed the

The university, however, said it was a purely scientific decision.

Studies of the injuries were intended to develop a sophisticated dummy for future tests and to tell scientists what injuries a human might have suffered from the seat belts or air bags. The baboons were anesthetized and strapped into "impact sleds" that attained certain speeds and then were suddenly stopped, simulating crashes at speeds of up to 40 miles, an

Researchers had said the baboons would be injured but not killed in the crashes, and that the animals would be killed later, while still drugged, so they would not experience pain.

The Mulberry's Fruit: 'Sweet But Tasteless'

66 A tedious brief scene," Shakespeare called the play within a play acted by Bottom and his company in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The play, the story of Pyramus and Thisby, was cribbed from Ovid's Metamorphoses, which tells how Thishy, arriving first at a rendezvous under the branches of a espitable tree, is frightened away by a lion, dropping her scarf as she flees. The lion, which we may assume has already bloodied its jaws on other fare than Thisby, mauls the scarf, leaving it stained with blood, circumstantial evidence which convinces Pyramus on his arrival that his lover has been devoured, bones and all, by the lion, so he stabs himself. Thisby, returning to find him dead, follows suit. The two shed so much blood that it scaked the roots of the tree, turning its white fruit forever red. The tree was a

Ovid, when he produced this explanation for the color of the mulberry, drew upon his imagination to conceive a mulberry originally white. There is a white mulberry, but the ancient Romans did not know it. They had the black mulberry, Morus nigra, probably a native of Persia, which was not quite the color of blood. but more of a dark purple.

The ancients held the mulberry in more esteem than we do. For us, it is a home-grown fruit, restricted to those persons fortunate enough to have the space on which to grow mulberry shrubs or trees, or a wild one, whose fruit is destined to be picked and con-sumed immediately, on the spot.

Mesopotamia.

The black mulberry was being cultivated at least 4,000 years ago. We know it was grown in Mesopotamia, where its seeds have been excavated from ancient ruins, and in early Egypt, where they have been found in tombs. The Bible, in II Samuel and Chronicles, reports the military action in which David, using a strategy dictated to him from on high, surprised the Philistines by

of a grove of mulberry trees. Mulberries were eaten early in Greece, though the fruit mentioned in Homer was probably not the mulberry but the blackberry. After ancient times, the progress of the mulberry northward from Italy during the Middle Ages seems to have been spotty and intermittent. We have no solidly documented information about lt between Charlemagne and Henri IV. The former ordered mulberries planted on his domains. The Duc de Sully, minister of Henri IV, commissioned the 16th-century agricultural expert. Olivier de Serres, to import 8,000 mulberry trees from Italy. which were planted on the grounds of the Sully château at

Rosny-sur-Seine. It was also in the 16th century that mulberries were planted, apparently for the first time, in Württemberg, Germany, but It seems to have been to feed slikworms rather than people. The fruit probably reached England during the same century. Handling Problems

Alexandre Dumas sald of it disdainfully thet it was suitable for feeding to poultry.

Nevertheless, this is the species which is a staple food in Afghanistan, where it replaces bread during certain months of the year, an unexpected role for a fruit so like a blackberry; but it is actually much closer to the fig. and dried mulberries can be used in any context suitable for dried figs. Human-Rights Report Cards country to write into law an obligation upon Itself to issue annual judgments on the internal affairs of other states. This was done in an act requiring human-rights reports on the over 100 nations that receive one or another form of American aid. The idea was to systematize the use of aid as a lever for rights. Just what was the mixture of idealism and arrogance in this approach remains arguable. No matter: the law represented a politically irresistible conviction that American foreign policy has strayed too far from American values: Jimmy Carter drew from this current, added to it and, partly because of it, became President. He is, therefore. poorly placed to draw attention to the limitations and pitfalls of an inflexible humanrights policy, though they are becoming increasingly apparent.

The latest set of human-rights report cards underlines the point. They show that countries regarded as important for strategic, economic or political reasons, such as Iran, South Korea, the Philippines and various black African states, are to be mildly criticized but not officially penalized for shortfalls in human rights. But a little unimportant country like Nicaragua is to he hoth criticized and penalized; Nicaragua, we note, has made major strides forward in rights in the last year, chiefly to appease the United States. For its pains it is not only faced, as a logical consequence of the loosening up. with growing internal unrest but is also now subjected to fresh humiliation at the hands of the United States. There is a double standard, or a triple or quadruple standard, and that is unacceptable.

Increasingly, abroad as well as at home, President Carter must cope with questions

The United States became in 1976 the first about the effectiveness of his rights policy on the one hand and its intrusiveness on the other. You may say that that is his problem. or that no policy attacked from both flanks can be all bad. But he may be tempting the worst of both worlds, and in the meantime he is losing public confidence. There is the further fact that others, catching up the banner at the point when he would put it down, are attempting to apply a rigid rights test to American participation in the international development banks and now, in a particularly inept and damaging move, in the International Monetary Fund. In these international institutions, the United States piainly does not have the right to dictate the rules the way it does in its programs of direct hilateral aid. In the name of one set of human rights, another set-having to do with economic expectations—is threatened.

> Mr. Carter finds it hard to say there can be too much of a good thing. But as leader of the parade he is the one who has to indicate an appropriate line of march. It's not enough that he protests, quietly, the damaging super-pure amendments that rights advocates, in their unholy alliance with foes of development aid, keep trying to fasten to development bills. He should educa: ... public, perhaps first himself, in the limitations as well as the virtues of an up-front rights policy. He should make more room for the idea that in this field private groups and public opinion traditionally have a special role, and that discretion can be more effective than a battering ram. He must find the parts of the job that government alooe can do well, and the private initiatives that are most effective. That's the meaning of leadership in human rights. THE WASHINGTON POST.

Neo-Gaullist View in EEC

The speech in Brusseis this week by David Owen, the foreign secretary, clearly confirms the "neo-Gaullist" attitude towards the European Community that has caused such concern in other capitals. The parallels with traditional French thinking are striking: Rejection of federalism is coupled with an intrinsic confidence in the superiority of British political and philosophical traditions: British fishermen are equated with French farmers; and Mr. Owen seems to be espousing the idea of confederation in Europe—a concept that has been endorsed by successive French leaders . . . Crisis in Horn of Africa

While the West dithers in diptomatic expostulation, Cuban regular forces are systematically fighting and working to bring one African country after another into the Sovict orbit. The consequences of allowing them to conquer and occupy Angola are now disastrously apparent in the Horn of Africa.

A soectacular Soviet arms-lift there, compnrable only to those with which the Kremiln propelled the Arabs into the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars, has propped up the crumbling Marxist Ethiopian empire and equipped its army for the conquest of Somaiia. The latest example was that unguided or disobedient Soviet satellite that crashed with its deadly radioactive fumes and wastes into the lowly Northwest Territories of Canada

It could have come down anywhere in the terrestrial world. All the atomic nations that monitor satellite traffic in outer space were not sure that it would land in lonely or densely populated areas. In fact, with all their fancy modern gear, they couldn't even predict the continent where it would come down. Early on the morning of the

The untold story is what was going on in Washington, Moscow. London and the other atomic capitals at that time.

The first point is that in a world of nation states, anybody can shoot anything on any orbit into space, and while everybody can be threatened, nobody is directing traffic.

The second point is that the Soviets were really not very helpful. On the 12th of January President Carter personally decided to notify the Soviet Union that

It was hicky where Cosmos 954 came down. Nothing was lost, but in the capitals tracking its collapse everything for a few days and weeks seemed in peril and officials here at least are beginning to think about how the nations of the world can begin to think, not about their immediate differences, but about their common interests in living together in the atomic age of the coming

But by the accident of Cosmos 954, Carter has begun to think much more seriously about the whole problem of the control of nuclear energy, not only in space. but on earth, and even under the seas. Should there not be new nents between the nations about the uses of atomic energy in space? Should the nations not be paying more attention to the development of the mineral resources of the seas? And the avoidance of war under the oceans and in space?

Weakness

What the accident of the Cosmos 954 has done is that it has dramatized, at least for officials in Washington, the weakness of present national and international controls of atomic energy, and the imperative need for new nuclear regulations among the nations on earth, in space, and

Rhodesia Powder Keg: On Seeking a Strategy

By Jonathan Power

CONDON-Who should rule Rhodesia once the white government of Ian Smith steps down the Patriotic Front who are shooting their way in from outside bases in Mozambique and Zambia, or Bishop Murorewa. Rev. Sithole and Chief Chirau who are peacefully negotiating in Salisbury an "internal settlement"?

British Foreign Secretary David Owen, together with the U.S. ambassador to the UN. Andrew Young, have answered the question with an independent middleway solution of their own, the so-called Angio-American proposals, which would give all sides a say in the new Zimbabwe.

Sentiment in Britain, however, is very much on the side of those in Salisbury. So powerful is the support for an "internal settlement" that there is a real danger that it could drastically limit Owen's and Young's room for maneuver.

Tacking

Moreover, Owen appears to be tacking into the pro-internal settlement pressure. Why? Owen's private view is that the "internal settlement" could mean civil war in Rhodesia, a war that would bring large numbers of Cubans south and would make large-scale war in southern Africa more likely. But this overriding concern at the moment is to pressure the Patriotic Front to negotiste the Anglo-American plan. The "internal settlement", he believes, paces the Patriotic Front more effectively than anything

On present performance the chances are that Owen's strategy will be proved right. In Malta last week, the Patriotic Front committed themselves to recognizing the results of free elec-tions in which they participate. They agreed to a transitional period of British colonial rule under Lord Carver. They also agreed to some role, though undefined, for UN troops. Moreover, the Patriotic Front's own long-term interests are bound up with the Anglo-American proposals, not least their desire to take over a well-run country that is functioning, orderly and economically successful, Likewise, it is in the self-interest of the Patriotic Front's principal backers, the Presidents of Tanzania, Zambia, Mosambique and Botswana, to support such a compromise. They do not want to see an expanded war with largescale Soviet and Cuban involvement, a war they couldn't con-trol, as they do the present relatively low-key one.

For much the same reasons, the South Africans have a vested interest in pushing Smith to be more amenable to the Patriotic Front. If the Cuban-Soviet military presence were to be given a legitimacy on the southern side of the Zambesi, their own chances of avoiding a bloody race war would be much reduced.

The danger with Owen's strategy, however, is that it offers no guarantee of success. The Patriotic Front could make the error of upping their bid too high. Or the South Africans could miscalculate and deceive themselves into thinking that an if "internal settiement" once in piace would force the West and the front-line Presidents into accepting "political realities."

The latter mistake is the most likely, for, as the debate in Britain holds, it is all too easy to see the "internal settlers" as the good guys and the guerrillas as terrorist outlaws. If public opinion is so one-sided in Britain it is even more so in South Africa, at least among the allwhite electorate.

Owen could easily find himself boxed into supporting an internal settlement, particularly if Smith and Muzorewa went through the careful motions of free elections and a full-scale amnesty for political prisoners and guerrillas.

To avoid this, Owen should now change direction and go on the offensive while he has still the chance. His U.S. colleague, Ambassador Young, admittedly worry him, has already done this. For Mr. Young, an "internal settlement" would be like the "settlement" of the Middle East in 1948 that produced "30 years of bloodshed and violence." He also observes: "The hanging and torture of the Rhodesian defense forces makes one question who is terrorizing the people of Zhn-

Needs to Tell

The Patriotic Front, Owen in !! should remind himself, is paced by the "internal settlement" anyway and it does not need him to keeping pointing this out. Owen needs to be free to lead public opinion to a greater understanding of the goals and purposes of the Patriotic Front. He needs to tell the public that they are the ones who for years were imprisoced by Smith, who tried to negotiate with him (oo terms milder than Muzorewa) and were refused, and who lo desperation were driven to fight. He should tell Mr. Vorster, Mr. Smith and Mr. Muzorewa that Britain will never recognize a regime that is not the product of elections in which the Patriotic Front freely participate.

If Owen doesn't succeed in this educational job and Smith, Muzorews and South Africa become engaged in a civil war with the Patriotic Front, the West through force of public opinion could end up on the wrong side. The West will be for South Africa and a against the Africans and the

Among other notable developments was the beginning of re-payments during the third quarter by Italian and British nonbank sectors, which had been large borrowers of Eurocurrency funds in the first half of 1977. Thus, growth of lending to the European Group of Ten countries slowed down, but lending to non-oil developing countries accelerated and there was a large flow of bank funds to the United States, the BIS said.

Under a contract with Oc-cidental Petroleum, Mineralimportexport has agreed to purchase up to 27.3 million tons of coal, which could be worth up to $2 billion, First Chicago said,

"The $53-million loss represents an initial payment by the Romanians and will be used to assist the mine's development. The mine will produce high-grade metallurgical coal which the Romanians need for their ex-panding steel industry," the bank said.

A First Chicago spokesman cald Romania's decision to invest in the United States demonstrated a much greater sophistication in East-West financial transactions than was apparent only a few years ago.

The interest cost of the loan was not disclosed. However, banking sources said that Romania agreed to pay interest that varies at 1 point above interbank Eurodollar offered rates.

U.K. Prices Rise By 6% in Month

The rise in the British Price Commission index, considered a leading indicator of retail prices, was 6 per cent in the six months to January compared with 6 per cent in December and 5.8 per cent in November.

The Price Commission said today: "The flatter trend in the underlying rate of notified price increases has continued. However, the effect of the low level of notifications in America and September, 1977, efter the Price Commission Act came into force, will cease to be reflected in the six-monthly encreases over the next two months."

The Price Commission index is based on price increases proposed by larger British concerns and they take at least 28 days to come into effect,

SEPTEMBER SEPTEMBER

By Shelby Foote. Random House. 302 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

"SEPTEMBER September" begins well. Three pathetic losers, who are white, plan to k'dnep an 8-year-old black boy for ransom. The kidnappers are a young man with delusions of grandeur, his 35-year-old mistress, who dreams of "powing" half-naked out of a cake at a stag party, and a 40-year-old gambler who believes, with all the evidence against him, that his luck is going to change.

In the opening pages of the novel, their car radio is playing "I'm Waiting in the Lobby of Your Heart." and Reeny, the woman, is describing her father as a foot-washing Baptist. Listening to the three of them, we al-ready feel the hopelessness of their plan and of their lives, a kind of Southern sadness that runs through the novels of witters like Faulkner and Flannery O'Connor.

The drama is played out sgainst the larger one of Orval Faubus's attempt to resist inte-gration in Little Rock, Ark., in the '50s. The riots there are a deliberate part of the kidneppers' plan to terrify the child's par-ents, to make them feel that they are ransoming not only child but also their destiny. that they are buying off fate.

So far, so good. Shelby Foote is an old hand who has written five other novels, and his threevolume history of the Civil War has given him a sure grasp of the spirit of place. It is summertime in Memphis, and under the glare of the sun, the landscape shimmers with portent. The reader settles back comfortably in expectation of one of those moody, masochistic Southern novels that are as melancholy and evocative as the far-off sound of a train whistle or the stylized chant of an old-time street peddler.

Then things begin to go wrong, The omniscient narrator, who takes turns with several of the characters in telling the story, betrays a style that sounds like neither spoken nor written English. Here, for example, is Martha, the boy's mother, read-ing the kidnappers' note: Whereas her immediate reaction had been an intensification of the alarm she brought to the reading in the first place . .

was done in this regard could be

Once we leave the kidnappers, Foote seems to falter. The boy's 15 KG 200, by J.D. Gilman mother and father are sunk in an unrelieved sanctimoniousness Disappointed in an early infatua-tion with a pool hall hustler. Martha has redoubled her origmal prissiness. Eben, her husband, apparent'y exhausted his imagination in putting himself through night school Martha's father, Theo, who will pay the ransom for his grandson Teddy. is a "monolithic" type, which means that his personality can only be perceived in its massive-ness, to the exclusion of parts. At some point in "September September," most of the characters tell us their life histories in considerable detail. There is no occasion, no provocation, for these reminiscences so that, in effect, we are asked to believe that people ruminate on their lives in ordered sentences and chronological sequence, as if they were earnestly introducing themselves in the first session of a psychoanalytic treatment.

Rufus, the youngest of the kidnappers, vacillates between manic brainlessness and incon-gruously sophisticated remarks. Re says that the waiter in a diner is like a character from Rafka, and that Reeny, his mis-tress, is the cootainer for the thing contained. Eben, the father, protests that in giving the kidnappers the money, he is surrendering "the only thing that the lack of would restrain them." When Rufus is in a tight spot.

torn between tame capture and the beckoning of a glorious sui-cidal gesture, he begins hearing pessages from "symphonies he had long forgotten" by Sibelius, complete with "ponderous, frantic beating as of wings."

It is difficult to know what to think about "September September." The good parts make one wish that Foote had improved the rest.

Hogg, for his part, calls Sanderson, "a fine young man whom I have a special interest in. I want to see him do well."

What happened to Sanderson does not happen to every paid athlete. But all of them, he contends, are subject to pressures that the fan cannot understand.

Neither do most club officials in the National Hockey League. The word has gone out emong them on Derek: He is not to be trusted. He has played for five matter league and two minor league teams since 1973. His last job, with the Vancouver Canucks the NHL, ended last October when the Canucks gave him half of his $165,000 salery and released

· Pulled Together'

So Woolf is on the phone now with Ted Lindsay, the general manager of the Detroit Red Wings, and he is telling Lindsay, "Ted, I wouldn't be calling you unless I thought Derek could out it. Ted, I've seen him. His attitude is good. His weight's down and he's got himself pulled together. I think he can help you,

Woolf cups a hand over the phone and puts a finger to his hos. There is, perhaps, a tings of irony in Woot's plane call to Lindsay. Just a few years ago Lindsay had said on television, when he was color commentator for the weekly bockey game, that "The Boston Bruins are crasy to take Sanderson back after he jumped leagues."

But now Lindsey has agreed to give Sanderson a chance. Sanderson has traveled to Detroit to begin twice-n-day workouts along with a program of callsthenics designed by Lindsay and the Red Wines' coach, Bobby Kromm.

It is a 10-day look, and according to Senderson, "I'll make it for the club. But first I've got to get my skates. When 'I left Tulsa, they never shipped them to me."

Derek is not even interested in what the Red Wings will pay him, although lately he has been obsessed with money.
"Twe got about $6,000 left from last year," he says. Then he Woolf unveils a printout of Sanderson's 1977 financial deal-ings. They include $35,000 spent; for four weeks in Hawaii. "I brought along five friends," expleins Sanderson. There are no-tations such as "American Express . . $12,000."

Woolf defends his handling of his client's money.

The Bills Came in

"When the bills came in," Wook explains, "they had to be paid."

"It's almost like 'A Star Is Born," says Woolf, "Did you see the way the guy has a big fall? I'm just hoping it can be like 'Rocky,' where he comes

Woolf gave Sanderson very little cash over the years. He sent him an allowance. Sanderson had a credit card. Senderson burst upon the followers in 1972, when he quit the Boston Bruina where he had consciousness of America's sports been earning $40,000 a year, to jump to the Philadelphia Blazers of the new World Hockey Association. Sanderson had never led the NHL in anything except short-handed goals, and had never been voted onto even the second team of all-stars.

5-Year Package Woolf got him a five-year package worth $2.85 million with the Blazera . It included a halfmillion salary the first year, with the remainder to be paid over 10 years. The Blazers agreed to pay that much because they be-lieved he would pull in the fans with his outrageous talk and aggressive play.

Sanderson, though, scored only three goals before hurting his back. The Blazers claimed it was an old injury. Finally, after a hitter argument, they settled his contract for $800,000 or more than $250,000 a goal.

France Ties Italy, 2-2, In Soccer

Comes From Behind In Naples Friendly

NAPLES, Feb. 8 (AP) .- France survived a controversial penalty and came from behind to tie Italy, 2-2, with a strong finish here today in a warmup game for the two teams, pitted in the same preliminary group of World Cup soccer in Argentina in June.

The Italians led, 2-0, at halftime, but France bounced back behind the sparkling play of a midfield masterminded by Michel Platini to miss victory just by a technicality in the final minutes of play. Center forward Francesco Gra-siani scored twice for Italy, on a penalty in the 14th minute and on a beautiful head shot in the 22d. Another neat header by Dominique Bathenay on a corner kick in the 51st and a free shot by Platini in the 80th evened the score for France. No Whistle

Platini had also scored in the 63d on another terrific free kick, but Spanish referee Francisco Martinez had not whistled for play to resume and the shot had to be repeated, and falled. Italy had a strong start and led the game for 25 minutes. Then the home team clearly faded as France, although not pressing too hard and not stepping on the started putting some pressure on the Italian defense.

The French lacked scoring power and only one shot was within the frame of the Italian net in the first half. The music changed, however, in the second half, with the visitors conducting repeated attacks through the beffled Italian defense

As predicted, Platini and team captain Marius Tresor were the best players for France, together with Batheney and Christian Dalger in the second half. Veteran midfielder Romeo Benetti, who played because of an injury to Renato Zaccarelli, was the best man on the Italian side.

The game was clearly influenced by the penalty for Italy, Midfielder Marco Tardelli came charging down the center and clashed in the French goal area with Tresor, who was clearly aiming at the ball.

The two fell and the referee called it a penalty, gesturing that the French defender had not hit the ball but the player, Graziani's shot sailed right inside the post for a goal and France was shaken

In the 15th minute, French goalle Andre Rey punched away a strong left footer by winger Roberto Bettega from several meters off on an attack by Claudio Sala down the left sidelines, where the French defense was weakest throughout the game. Seven minutes later Sala did it again and this time his pass sailed past Rey's reach and landed on Graziani's bead for the second

The game practically ended bere for Italy as France surged into command, although just gradually. French team manager Michel Hidalgo changed a winger Gemmerich in and Rouyer out and a midfielder, plsying Henri Michel for Jean-Marc Guillou, and the French attacks became faster, more consistent and accurate.

Havlicek Nearing Retirement

Celtics Losing Another Link With the Glory Days

By Sam Goldaper

NEW YORK, Feb. 8 (NYT) .-When the next National Basket-ball Association season arrives, uniform No. 17 will hang from the nafters of Boston Garden, along with 13 championship flags and the retired numbers of other Celtic greats, including Bill Russell, Bob Cousy and Tom Hem-

John Havlicek recently an-nounced his retirement, effective at the end of the season. Since the Celties are in the throes of one of their worst seasons and are unlikely to make the playoffs, Havlicek would play his finel game on April 8 against the Buf-falo Braves, one day after his 38th birthday. And with his retirement, another link to "Celtic pride" and "Celtic dynasty," once the most feared words in pro-basketball, will pass into history.

"John wanted to announce earlier that this would be his final season," said Larry Fielsher, his lawyer, "but Red Auerbach [the Celtic president and general manager] had asked him to wait. Now, with the Celtics in the final stages of making their last swing wants to say goodbye to the game."

Havlicek Leaves His Marks During his 17 sessons, Haylicek. with his durability and consistency, has written his name indelibly into the record books. Every time he walks onto the court his record of having competed in more than 1,300 games grows. Additionally, he is the only player in NBA history to score more than 1,000 points in 15 consecutive seasons, and his more than 25,000 points rank him third on the career scoring list behind Wilt Chamberlain (31419) and Oscar Robertson (26,710).

Havlicek has been in 13 playoffs and on seven Celtic championship teams. His 3.376 points scored in playoff competition are second only to Jerry West, now the Los' Angeles Laker coach.

But Havlicek's value has never been reflected in statistics. Through the years he has been a Celtic inspiration and coordingtor on the court. When Havlicek' would run, the Celties would follow. He was their Pied Piper.

West, who played 14 seasons with the Lakers, once said of Havlicek: "He's a freak, His endurance is incredible. There's not a man in the NBA who can stay with John the entire game. to go on forever."

After the Celtics had lost eight of their first nine games, the 6-5 Havicek was benched in favor of Cedric (Cornbread) Maxwell, the team's top draft choice. It was the first time a healthy Havlicek, the Celtic captain, was not in a starting lineup since early in the 1969-70 season when be finally gave up being the best sixth man in the game.

There had been reports, before Heinsohn was dismissed and after Auerbach had turned down the job to return to coaching, that Havlicek had been offered the job as the team's head coach. "John's interest in coaching right now is zero," said Fleisher.

"He has expressed that several nes. He may change his mind some day: When Willis Reed left the Knicks, he had no interest in coaching but changed his

LONDON, Feb. 6 (AP)___ John Conteh, fresh from a comeback victory over America's Joe Cokes, learned from doctors today he cannot box again for at least two months. The 26-year-old Briton had six stitches in a cut above his left cheekbone - the legacy from his hard and unconvincing 10-round points victory over Cokes last night. The doctors' verdict spoiled Conteh's plans for warmups for a world light-heavyweight title fight against Mate Parloy of Yugoslavia in April or May.

based on speed and stamina, wearing the opposition down. I don't really know if you could call it overpowering them. Perhaps it's better to say overrumning them. But I've always found that you're only tired when you think you're tired, so I've made it a habit to push myself when I start thinking about it. It increased my stamina and, truthfully, I can't say I've ever really been tired in my life." During the 1970-71 season Havlitek played 3,678 minutes in 81 games, averaging 45.7 minutes a game, and that was his best scoring season. He averaged 28.9 points a game.

Havlicek has watched the NBA grow from nine teams to its current 22 since he was the Celtics' top 1962-63 draft choice out of Ohio State. He can recall when players wore black basketball winning the championship would last an entire offseason. The winning share is now more than $20,000

The Havicek Championship' Havlicek owns seven championship rings and still wears his first one, primarily out of sentiment. But he cherishes the 1973-74 ring the most because the victory over the Milwaukee Bucks was tabbed "the Haylicek championship."

After he had been voted the most valuable player of that championship series, he walked around the Celtie dressing room in Milwaukee, hugged his team-

World Record Is Claimed In Swimming

BRISBANE, Feb. 6 (Reuters). - Australian schoolgirl Tracey Wickham swam a best time for the 1500 meters freestyle in a solo attempt here tonight and Australian officials claimed it as a world record.

Wickham clocked 16 minutes 14.93 seconds to clip 9.67 seconds off the world mark of 16:24.6 set by an American, Alice Browne, at the U.S. national championships last Au-

She was timed electronically todey in a pool flanked by Australian swimming officials and stayed ahead of the lapby-lap schedule mapped out by coach Bill Sweetenham.

Australian officials maintained that the time was a record because all requirements were met, but the mark still has to be ratified by the International Swimming Fed-

Presumed Skull Of Swedenborg To Be Auctioned

The skull is expected to fetch between £2,000 and £4,000 1$3,860 Bnd $7,720).

The report which accompanies the skull was prepared in Sweden hy the Royal Society of Sciences of Uppsala in 1960. It concludes evidence supporting the skull's authenticity "may be regarded as practically conclusive." Sotheby's described the skull as "unusually loog and narrow (and) of dark ivory color." It said that apart from a missing jawbone and marks left during the tests to prove authenticity, the skull is "in good condition, with an attractive patina,"

"That," I said, "is not a bad thing. I'd rather fight the Soviets outside the Van Allen Belt than down here on the ground. Nobody can get too shaken up over a dead satellite."

'Don't kid yourself. We would take a very dim view of the Soviets blowing up one of our satellites in space."

. "But you could edways send up another one." I said

"That's not the point. There's estion of pride at stake. How would we look in the eyes of the world if we permitted the Soviets to shoot down one of our satellites, and we didn't shoot down one of theirs? We can't permit the Soviets to have a dominent ion in the autil-satellite reakn."

"Why do you think the Soviet military decided to go tato space warfare?" I asked.

Well, we certainly were giving it some thought. When you see the other guy's satellite orbiting around you night and day. you get fed up after a while and start wondering if you can knock It down.

Ex-Swinging London Is Now More Sheikh

By William Tuohy

ONDON .- Many Britons are having difficulty adjusting to the "Arabization" of London, which has turned the British capital into a kind of Baghdad on the Thames.

Arab sheikhs have purchased castles and hotels and mansions in posh residential districts. They have taken over an office building in the center of the financial district and built a mosque in the manicured precincts of Regent's London's fanciest nightspot "Anabel's," has been rechristened 'Arabel's" by the cognoscenti because of the prevalence of freeending customers from the Middle East.

Ever since the price of oil was quadrupled four years ago, bil-lions of dollars from the Arab petroleum-producing countries have been flooding into London.

No one knows just how much m mey has come into Eritain from the Arab countries because the desert nations are reluctant to publicize the extent of their investments, and some Arab money reaches London through Swiss banks or offshore bolding companies.

But the Bank of England estimates the net inflow of cash from the oll-exporting countries last year at $6 billion Bank holdings from the oil exporters ran around $34 billion.

The enormous Arab investment has prompted some observers to warn that Britain might be subject to financial or political blackmail by Arab investors. The concern is understandable. The sudden accumulation of such buge sums by countries with barely developed economies is historically unique, and disturbing to some

U.S. congressional committees have suggested that the United assets by the oil-producing Arab countries.

Some specialists here are worried that during a future Middle East political crisis, Arab investors could tell Britain to support their political position-tithe "or else," it was suggest-ed, could result in the Arabs abruptly pulling out of sterling and the British market, leaving the pound and financial institutions badly battered. But after analyzing the nature of Arah investment in Britain. the most experienced financial experts in London now believe there is little danger of the Arabs seeking to damage the British economy—whatever the Middle East political develop-

Stake Increasing "It is true that Arabs are investing heavily in Britain," one senior money manager said, "But this means that they have an increasing stake in the fate of our economy and institutions. I think that this will be a force for stability rather than otherwise." Another investment banker declared: "The Arabs are broadening their investments in Britain, buying shares of companies. This form of investing promotes inter-

J.A. Morrell, director of Robert Fleming Holdings, one of the biggest investment advisers in the Arab world, said: "In spite of press reports to the contrary, official Arab investment authorities are extremely conservative in their outlook. My principal concern has been that the innate conservatism of the Arab, unless changed, will in an inflationprone world produce a very poor long-term result and consequent recriminations"

Thus Arab investors have tended to keep their money in cash deposits or bonds with a fixed yield. Only recently have Arab investors shifted toward stock shares of foreign companies.

The inflow of Arab money into Britain is still heavily overshadowed by the amount of Arab investment in the United States, mainly because of the long connection between America and the richest of all Arab countries,

Saudi Arabia "The Saudis have traditionally relied on American investment advice and placed their money through American banks," a Brit-ish banker said. "The Kuwaitisand the Gulf States, on the other hand, have tended to look toward London." London has long been a favorite place for Arabs to educate their children, to come for medical treatment and to spend a boliday. Thus, when the petrodollers began rolling in, it was natural for many Arab investors to turn toward Britain, particularly when the Lebanese civil war wiped out Beirut as an Arab banking center,

"Property in the United Kingdom has attracted Arab money on a significant scale, both private government," Mr. Morrell "The Arabs were pleased said. that their arrival on the U.K. property scene was welcomed, and not resented and feared as in most other less developed finan-

"Nor was there any political reaction such as occurred in Washington, I believe the Arabs too have been impressed by the integrity and sophistication of the London property market."

At first, Arab individuals began buying London property, which was at a low point, for themselves. Some of the best homes in London, in the most exclusive neighborhoods like Mayfair and Belgravia, and in the suburb of Hampstead were purchased by Arabs at increasingly higher

Then Arab entrepreneurs and governments started buying commercial property like the Com-mercial Union Building in the financial district, hotels like the Park Tower and the Royal Kensington and corporations such as St. Martin's Property Co., which controls 2 million square feet of office space in London alone. Finally, the Arab investors began buying into British compa-nies through shares on the stock But the Arabs have only rarely attempted to take over a controlling interest in a company, and then usually in construction arms doing a heavy business in the Middle East. They have instead kept their interest in companies generally lower than 5 per cent, the level at which disclosure must be made public of boldings in Britain.

To aid their move to London Arab investors have now estab lished several new banks like the Allied Arab Bank. At least six major Arab banks now have branches in London

Arab bankers as well as British bankers are trying to encourage Arab investors to move into longterm projects.

Although the Arabs have bil-lions of dollars in short-term mouey instruments, most analysts believe they would not move these out of London as political Most observers here believe it would be difficult if not impossible to visualize a situation in which all the Arabs—private in-dividuals and governments alike would act in concert to jeopardize the British financial mar-And even if that highly unlike-
